There is an opinion that significant economic benefits can be gained through advertising; some others, however, believe a sense of dissatisfaction among the public is generated when they are faced with adverts on a daily basis. From my perspective, there are strong cases to be made for both sides of the argument.

On the one hand, supporters of advertising often point to the undeniable economic benefits it can bring. With creative content and appealing visual effects, consumer demand is stimulated; it naturally follows that consumer spending and thus production are increased, resulting in more employment opportunities, greater state revenues through taxation and ultimately a stronger economy. This can be clearly seen in the way e-commerce platforms, say, Shopee or Lazada in Vietnam, rely heavily on advertising campaigns to attract customers, thus boosting both their sales and the entire digital retail sector. Furthermore, advertising creates jobs in marketing, media and design, which makes it an important driver of economic activity.

Those on the other side of the debate, however, argue that advertising entails negative social consequences. Advertisements of all types, ranging from pop-ups on social platforms to billboards or supermarket banners, constantly show images of perfect lifestyles, beauty standards or luxury possessions, leading to dissatisfaction among viewers. Young people in particular may well feel pressured to buy trendy clothes or the latest smart gadgets advertised on TikTok or Facebook, causing a sense of frustration when such items are beyond their budget. In this sense, advertising is often blamed for promoting materialistic values and a money-driven culture in the long run.

Overall, it seems to me that both views are valid to a certain extent: advertising, while contributing to social dissatisfaction, also plays a crucial role in economic development.

Từ vựng & collocations

entail (ĐT): kéo theo — entail negative consequences.

dissatisfaction (DT): sự không hài lòng — dissatisfaction among viewers.

frustration (DT): sự bức bối, thất vọng — a sense of frustration.

materialistic (TT): coi trọng vật chất — materialistic values.

stimulate consumer demand (cụm ĐT): kích thích nhu cầu tiêu dùng — consumer demand is stimulated.

beyond their budget (cụm giới từ): vượt ngân sách — items are beyond their budget.

The aim of advertising is to boost sales of unnecessary goods. To what extent do you agree or disagree?

Bài mẫu

It is argued that advertising primarily persuades consumers to purchase items they have no real use for. Personally, I am of the opposite school of thought, since the main role of adverts is to inform people with certain needs of the options available to them.

It is unwise to claim that the primary aim of advertising is to boost sales of products that people do not need. Celebrities who attend luxurious parties and events, for example, may need to own an expensive handbag or watch to fit in or to promote their image and reputation. The vast majority of people, however, may find such items wasteful, given that their needs are vastly different from those of the rich and famous. Advertisements for a Hermès handbag or a Rolex watch worth thousands of dollars can therefore help the rich and famous buy what they need, while promoting something that other people do not.

I strongly believe that the main role of adverts is to inform people with certain needs of what options are available to them. Adverts from high-end brands, for example, compete to sell their products to wealthy customers and rarely appear in places visited only by middle- or low-income earners, whose needs are vastly different. These people are more likely to see advertisements from companies selling fast food or other essentials, say, shampoos or bargain-priced clothing. While such advertisements present these offerings to prospective buyers and increase sales, what these people buy is often in line with what they actually need.

In conclusion, I am firmly convinced that advertising informs prospective buyers about products that meet their particular needs, rather than simply boosting sales of unnecessary goods.

Từ vựng & collocations

wasteful (TT): lãng phí — find such items wasteful.

prospective (TT): tiềm năng — prospective buyers.

high-end (TT): cao cấp — high-end brands.

reputation (DT): danh tiếng — promote their image and reputation.

fit in (cụm ĐT): hòa nhập — fit in at luxurious events.

in line with (cụm giới từ): phù hợp với — in line with what they need.

essentials (DT số nhiều): những hàng hóa thiết yếu — other essentials, say, shampoos: hàng thiết yếu khác, chẳng hạn dầu gội.

bargain-priced (TT): có giá rẻ, hời — bargain-priced clothing: quần áo có giá phải chăng.

vastly different (cụm TT): khác biệt rất lớn — their needs are vastly different.

promote their image and reputation (cụm ĐT): nâng hình ảnh và danh tiếng — buy a handbag or watch to promote their image and reputation.

Today, the high sales of popular consumer goods reflect the power of advertising and not the real needs of the society in which they are sold. To what extent do you agree or disagree?

Bài mẫu

It is argued that persuasive marketing, rather than genuine consumer demand, accounts for the strong sales of many everyday products. Personally, I am of the opposite school of thought, since advertising reinforces pre-existing needs rather than creating entirely new ones.

Admittedly, one might argue that advertising tempts people into buying products they might not otherwise need. This is predicated on the assumption that advertising agencies almost always employ different marketing strategies, say, eye-catching graphics, engaging content and celebrity endorsements, to sway consumers' decisions. According to this view, the way products are advertised can persuade consumers to buy them, making their sales appear to reflect the power of advertising rather than any real need. This can be seen in the rise in sales of smartphones and tablets, which is often attributed to the highly effective advertising campaigns of high-tech corporations such as Apple or Samsung.

However, the notion that advertising creates new needs, I strongly believe, is a fallacy, since there must be some kind of need before a person makes a shopping decision. The sharp increase in demand for cosmetic products, particularly among females, can be ascribed to existing concerns about whether physical appearance determines success and happiness. Advertising amplifies these concerns by constantly highlighting the benefits of beauty-enhancing products and raising public awareness of the wide range of options available on the market. This means that advertising reinforces pre-existing needs rather than creating new ones, with the demand for these products reflecting concerns that already exist in society.

In conclusion, I am firmly convinced that high sales reflect pre-existing needs which advertising amplifies, rather than the power of advertising alone.

Từ vựng & collocations

sway (ĐT): chi phối — sway consumers' decisions.

amplify (ĐT): khuếch đại — amplify these concerns.

reinforce (ĐT): củng cố — reinforce pre-existing needs.

fallacy (DT): nhận định sai lầm — the notion ... is a fallacy.

celebrity endorsements (cụm DT): quảng bá của người nổi tiếng — employ celebrity endorsements.

be ascribed to (cụm ĐT): được cho là do — be ascribed to existing concerns.

pre-existing (TT): đã tồn tại từ trước — pre-existing needs: nhu cầu đã có, không phải do quảng cáo tạo mới.

raise public awareness (cụm ĐT): nâng nhận thức công chúng — raise public awareness of + DT: giúp công chúng biết về các lựa chọn.

tempt ... into buying (cụm ĐT): lôi kéo ai mua hàng — tempt people into buying products.

beauty-enhancing products (cụm DT): sản phẩm giúp cải thiện vẻ ngoài — the benefits of beauty-enhancing products.

Some people say that advertising is extremely successful at persuading us to buy things. Other people think that advertising is so common that we no longer pay attention to it. Discuss both views and give your own opinion.

Bài mẫu

Some people believe that advertisements have considerable power over purchasing decisions, whereas others argue that constant exposure has made consumers largely unresponsive to them. Personally, I am of the former school of thought.

Admittedly, one might argue that advertising is no longer effective given its overwhelming presence in daily life. This can be seen in how most viewers on YouTube immediately click 'skip' after a few seconds, while users on Facebook or TikTok often scroll past sponsored posts without paying any attention. Furthermore, a growing number of individuals install ad-blocking software to avoid being disturbed by pop-ups, making advertisements appear to be background noise rather than meaningful communication. According to this view, these behaviours explain why some conclude that consumers are hardly receptive to commercial messages.

However, I strongly believe that advertising continues to influence consumer choices, yet in a more subtle manner. Even if a YouTube commercial is skipped, the brand's logo typically appears within the opening seconds, leaving a trace in the viewer's memory. Repeated exposure to the same colours, slogans or celebrity endorsements on social media can also gradually build familiarity, which is a powerful driver of purchasing behaviour. In other words, even when people believe they are ignoring advertisements, the repetition and emotional associations can still affect their decisions, indicating that advertising remains an effective force in shaping consumption.

In conclusion, I am firmly convinced that advertising remains effective at influencing consumer choices, even when people pay little conscious attention to it, since repeated exposure can build familiarity and leave a trace in their memory.

overwhelming (TT): quá nhiều, khó tránh — an overwhelming presence.

receptive (TT): sẵn lòng đón nhận — receptive to commercial messages.

subtle (TT): tinh tế, khó nhận ra — in a more subtle manner.

familiarity (DT): sự quen thuộc — build familiarity.

scroll past (cụm ĐT): lướt qua — scroll past sponsored posts.

leave a trace (cụm ĐT): để lại dấu vết — leave a trace in the viewer's memory.

exposure (DT): sự tiếp xúc — repeated exposure to + DT: việc tiếp xúc lặp lại với quảng cáo.

sponsored posts (cụm DT): bài đăng được tài trợ — scroll past sponsored posts: lướt qua các bài đăng quảng cáo.

emotional associations (cụm DT): những cảm xúc được gắn với thương hiệu — the repetition and emotional associations.

a powerful driver (cụm DT): yếu tố thúc đẩy mạnh mẽ — a powerful driver of purchasing behaviour.

Some people say that advertising encourages us to buy things that we really do not need. Others say that advertisements tell us about new products that may improve our lives. Discuss both views and give your own opinion.

Bài mẫu

Some people believe that commercials tempt consumers into unnecessary purchases, whereas others see them as a useful source of information about products that can enhance their lives. From my perspective, there are strong cases to be made for both sides of the argument.

On the one hand, critics argue that advertising can tempt people into buying products they do not actually need. This is predicated on the fact that advertising agencies employ different marketing strategies, say, eye-catching graphics, engaging content and celebrity endorsements, to make products appear desirable and sway consumers' decisions. For example, campaigns for the latest Apple or Samsung smartphones may encourage people to replace their existing devices even when these still work well and meet their everyday needs. In such cases, the purchase is driven by the desire to own something new rather than a genuine need, illustrating how effective advertising can encourage unnecessary spending.

Those on the other side of the debate, however, argue that advertising serves a valuable function by informing the public about products that can enhance their lives. Campaigns for electric vehicles and solar panels, for example, raise awareness of environmentally friendly technologies, helping consumers who want to reduce carbon emissions discover suitable options. Advertisements for organic food can provide information that helps people make informed lifestyle choices, while promotional campaigns for online learning platforms or language apps introduce opportunities for personal growth that individuals might not discover otherwise. From this perspective, advertising helps consumers find products and services that meet existing needs, with its value lying in making useful options known to the people who could benefit from them.

Overall, it seems to me that both views are valid: advertising can create a desire for unnecessary purchases and help people discover genuinely useful products. The distinction lies in whether it merely makes something appealing or shows how it meets a real need.

tempt (ĐT): lôi kéo — tempt people into buying products.

sway consumers' decisions (cụm ĐT): tác động đến quyết định người mua — sway + quyết định/ý kiến.

celebrity endorsements (cụm ĐT): sự quảng bá của người nổi tiếng — employ celebrity endorsements.

desirable (TT): đáng khao khát — make products appear desirable.

a genuine need (cụm ĐT): nhu cầu thực sự — a desire rather than a genuine need.

raise awareness of (cụm ĐT): giúp biết đến, nâng cao nhận thức về — raise awareness of environmentally friendly technologies.

informed lifestyle choices (cụm ĐT): lựa chọn lối sống dựa trên hiểu biết — make informed lifestyle choices.

personal growth (cụm ĐT): phát triển bản thân — opportunities for personal growth.

otherwise (TrT): nếu không có điều vừa nêu — might not discover otherwise: có thể không biết đến nếu không có quảng cáo.

meet existing needs (cụm ĐT): đáp ứng nhu cầu sẵn có — products and services that meet existing needs.

Research indicates that nowadays some consumers are much less influenced by advertising than in the past. What are the reasons for this trend? Do you think this is a positive or negative development?

Bài mẫu

Research suggests that advertising plays a smaller role in some consumers' purchasing decisions than it once did. This essay will, accordingly, provide insights into the reasons for this trend, which I strongly believe is a positive development.

With regard to the underlying causes, one contributing factor is the overwhelming presence of advertising in daily life. This can be seen in how most viewers on YouTube immediately click 'skip' after a few seconds, while users on Facebook or TikTok often scroll past sponsored posts without paying any attention. A growing number of individuals also install ad-blocking software to avoid being disturbed by pop-ups, further reducing their exposure to commercial messages. Another significant driver is that many consumers now rely more on online reviews, star ratings and personal recommendations than on glossy commercials when deciding what to buy.

I strongly believe that this is a positive development for both consumers and companies. Consumers are less likely to be manipulated by emotional or exaggerated messages, relying instead on careful comparisons, customer reviews and their actual needs before making a purchase. This means that their decisions reflect a more intelligent and responsible form of consumption, rather than simply the persuasive power of a commercial. From the perspective of companies, this change encourages investment in product quality, customer service and innovation rather than reliance solely on marketing, allowing both businesses and consumers to benefit in the long run.

In conclusion, the overwhelming presence of advertisements and greater reliance on reviews and recommendations help explain this trend, which encourages more responsible consumption and greater investment in product quality.

Từ vựng & collocations

manipulate (ĐT): thao túng — be manipulated by messages.

exaggerated (TT): phóng đại — exaggerated messages.

innovation (DT): sự đổi mới — investment in innovation.

solely (TrT): chỉ, duy nhất — reliance solely on marketing.

star ratings (cụm DT): đánh giá bằng sao — rely on star ratings.

responsible consumption (cụm DT): tiêu dùng có trách nhiệm — a form of responsible consumption.

glossy (TT): hào nhoáng, trau chuốt — glossy commercials: quảng cáo đẹp, được dàn dựng hấp dẫn.

rely on (cụm ĐT): dựa vào — rely on reviews / recommendations: dựa vào đánh giá / lời giới thiệu.

overwhelming presence (cụm DT): sự xuất hiện dày đặc, khó tránh — the overwhelming presence of advertising.

persuasive power (cụm DT): sức thuyết phục — the persuasive power of a commercial.

Consumers are faced with increasing numbers of advertisements from competing companies. measures can be taken to protect them?

Bài mẫu

Rival businesses are exposing consumers to an ever-growing volume of promotional messages. This essay will, accordingly, provide insights into the considerable influence of these advertisements and the measures that can be taken to protect consumers from their harmful effects.

Advertisements can exert considerable influence on consumers by encouraging unnecessary purchases and overwhelming them with commercial messages. Persuasive advertisements are often accused of luring people into buying things they may not otherwise need, a tendency reinforced by the endorsement of celebrities who hold strong social influence. This makes the promoted products appear more trustworthy and desirable, causing consumers to develop impulsive and wasteful buying behaviours. Furthermore, social network users can feel overwhelmed by the colossal number of advertisements, being incessantly bombarded with pop-ups that disrupt their online experience while they are gaming or watching films, since they may be unable to turn them off until half a minute later.

To address these problems, governments can adopt several measures to protect consumers. One possible solution is to impose strict censorship on all advertisements, with rigorous content checks carried out before the release of any commercial to ensure that product descriptions accurately reflect their true quality. This would help prevent consumers from being persuaded to make purchases on the basis of misleading descriptions of the products advertised. Another viable approach is to restrict the number of platforms on which a company is permitted to market its products, thereby protecting consumers against information overload and helping them avoid making unnecessary purchases.

In conclusion, advertisements can encourage impulsive purchases and cause information overload, yet these effects can be reduced through rigorous content checks and restrictions on the number of advertising platforms.

Từ vựng & collocations

impulsive (TT): bốc đồng — impulsive buying behaviours.

rigorous (TT): nghiêm ngặt — rigorous content checks.

censorship (DT): sự kiểm duyệt — impose strict censorship on + DT.

misleading (TT): gây hiểu lầm — misleading descriptions.

information overload (cụm DT): quá tải thông tin — protect consumers against information overload.

be bombarded with (cụm DT): bị dồn dập bởi — be bombarded with pop-ups.

lure (ĐT): dụ dỗ, lôi kéo — lure people into + V-ing: lôi kéo người khác làm gì.

disrupt (ĐT): làm gián đoạn — disrupt their online experience: làm gián đoạn trải nghiệm trên mạng.

exert considerable influence (cụm DT): gây ảnh hưởng đáng kể — exert considerable influence on consumers.

endorsement (DT): sự công khai ủng hộ/quảng bá, ở đây của người nổi tiếng — the endorsement of celebrities.

Society would benefit from a ban on all forms of advertising because it serves no useful purpose and can even be damaging. To what extent do you agree or disagree?

Bài mẫu

It is argued that prohibiting advertising altogether would serve the public interest, since it offers no real benefits and may even be harmful. Personally, I am of the opposite school of thought, although advertising can have harmful effects.

Admittedly, advertising can cause annoyance and encourage wasteful consumption. Social network users, for example, can feel overwhelmed by being incessantly bombarded with pop-ups, which disrupt their online experience while they are gaming or watching films. Furthermore, advertisements constantly show images of perfect lifestyles, beauty standards or luxury possessions, causing young people to feel pressured to buy trendy clothes or the latest smart gadgets, even when such items are beyond their budget. This can lead to frustration and dissatisfaction, with advertising promoting materialistic values and a money-driven culture in the long run.

However, the notion that advertising serves no useful purpose, I strongly believe, is a fallacy. Advertising informs people with certain needs of what options are available to them, with campaigns for health-related products or online learning platforms providing useful information and introducing opportunities for personal growth. On a wider societal scale, its creative content and appealing visual effects can stimulate consumer demand, encouraging production and creating more employment opportunities and greater state revenues through taxation. This can be seen in how e-commerce platforms, say, Shopee or Lazada in Vietnam, rely heavily on advertising campaigns to attract customers, boosting both their sales and the entire digital retail sector.

In conclusion, advertising can sometimes be manipulative or harmful, yet it is far from useless; what is needed is stricter regulation to curb misleading claims and limit harmful messages, allowing society to benefit from its positive functions while minimising its negative consequences.

Từ vựng & collocations

Advertising is all around us in today's world. Some people see this as positive, because it gives us more choices as consumers. Others, however, say that it makes people selfish and wanting more and more products. Discuss both views and give your own opinion.

Bài mẫu

Some people welcome the widespread use of advertising, since it helps shoppers discover a wider range of products, whereas others argue that it promotes selfishness and a constant desire for more possessions. From my perspective, there are strong cases to be made for both sides of the argument.

On the one hand, supporters of advertising often point to the wider choices it provides for consumers. Advertising informs people with certain needs of what options are available to them, with high-end brands presenting their offerings to wealthy customers and other companies advertising essentials, say, shampoos or bargain-priced clothing. Furthermore, campaigns for electric vehicles and solar panels raise awareness of environmentally friendly technologies, while advertisements for organic food options provide useful information that enables people to make better lifestyle choices. Promotional campaigns for online learning platforms or language apps also introduce opportunities for personal growth that individuals might not discover otherwise, illustrating how advertising guides consumers towards products that can benefit their lives.

Those on the other side of the debate, however, argue that advertising encourages people to want more and more possessions. Advertisements constantly show images of perfect lifestyles, beauty standards or luxury possessions, leading to dissatisfaction among viewers with who they are and what they have. Young people in particular may well feel pressured to buy trendy clothes or the latest smart gadgets advertised on TikTok or Facebook, causing frustration when such items are beyond their budget. In this sense, advertising can promote materialistic values and a money-driven culture, encouraging people to focus on their own possessions and continually want more.

Overall, it seems to me that both views are valid to a certain extent: advertising can encourage excessive consumption, while also providing valuable information and wider choices for consumers.
